A man went sky diving for the first time. He jumped from the aeroplane and pulled the ripcord after about five seconds. Nothing happened. He tried again. Still nothing happened. He started panicking but remembered the back-up chute. He pulled the cord and nothing happened. He frantically began yanking the cords of both parachutes but to no avail. Resigned to death, he looked down and couldn't believe his eyes when he saw another man approaching him from below. Just as the other guy passed, the sky-diver yelled "Do you know anything about sky diving?" The other guy yelled back, "No mate! Do you know anything about lighting gas barbeques?"

Lurching out of the barber's chair after a very close and shaky shave, the customer asked for a large glass of water. "Thirsty?" enquired the barber. "No" said the customer. "I just wanted to see that my throat has not been cut!"
